

ABSTRACT

A concrete form is made using a plurality of formwork panels, each comprising a plastic core and a steel facing layer and a steel backing layer attached to the plastic core. Each panel is from 9 millimeters to 15 millimeters thick and weighs 77 pounds or less. A plurality of fasteners connect the panels. A steel support framework may support the panels. Concrete is poured into the form.